Astronomers have spotted an enormous bubble of mercury gas at the center of our galaxy. The object is essentially the planet-sized corpse of a star that's been blasted away from the center of our home galaxy—a kind of cosmic trash can. It's been named SDSS J015918.01+225919.5. "Our first reaction was, 'How did they get this thing to come out of the center of the galaxy?'" Eric Mamajek, an astronomer at the University of Rochester in New York, says. "But it really does what it says." Just as the force of the supernova exerts pressure on nearby stars, the expanding debris field of the supernova exerts pressure on gas
